

DALY CITY NOTES

Mrs. Felix Darragh, of San Diego avenue, spent Thursday in Redwood City.

Last Tuesday Mrs. Helen Valentino and daughter Dolores were luncheon guests of Mrs. Lorraine Wall.

Mrs. Ray Stacey, of Napa street, Vallejo, formerly of Risel street, Daly City, visited with relatives, friends and neighbors in Daly City last Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Grummel and son, of Harvard street, formerly residing on Irvington street, motored to Santa Cruz on Easter Sunday and spent the day as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Nasch.

The Burlingame Relief Society of the Latter-day Saints church met at the home of Mrs. A. Hanson, of Acton street, for luncheon, last Friday. After the luncheon a special business meeting was held.

Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, will conduct another of its monthly whists at Legion Hall, 474 San Diego avenue, on Tuesday evening, April 10. The play will start promptly at 8:30. Everyone is invited to attend.

Mrs. Millie Fontana Lugliana, of San Diego avenue, who has been employed at the Relish Bakery as a clerk for the past seven years, will be missed by her many friends, but they will be glad to know that Millie is able to retire from business activities.

Mrs. J. E. Walker was hostess last week at a breakfast party under the auspices of the Crocker Parent-Teachers' Association, having as her guests Mesdames Roberts, Grantham, Pauw, Clifton, Bradbury, Jordan, Wegner, Katch, Gaiter, and Miss Corinne Pauw and Miss Evelyn Walker.

Mrs. H. O'Connor entertained at a family dinner at her home on Easter Sunday.

Miss Dorothy Manderville, of Risel street, left last Wednesday for Agnew, where she spent several days as the guest of her sister, Mrs. Della Campbell.

His many friends are glad to hear that little Freddie Wettstein is now on the road to recovery, following his recent operation, although still confined to the French hospital.

Miss Claire Hanson, of Acton street, entertained friends at a bridge and luncheon last Saturday. The guests included Miss Margaret Overhalt, and Ellie Lee, both of San Francisco, and Miss Bernice Frick, of Berkeley.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, of Westlake avenue, and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Clark, of Woodrow street, attended the wedding on Easter Sunday of Mr. Clark's sister, Miss Beatrice Clark, who became the bride of Mr. Frank Leary. After the ceremony, twenty-four guests attended the wedding dinner given at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clark, of Homestead street, San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Pearlman and Mr. and Mrs. Meyer Kanter, of Miriam street, entertained at dinner last Sunday, having as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Mark Pearlman and son Donald, Mr. and Mrs. Nat Pearlman and daughter Doreen, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Greenstein and children, Miss Caroline Glasser, Miss Irma Glasser, Mr. and Mrs. M. Banco, Mr. and Mrs. J. Canell, Mrs. Rose Abt and Mr. and Mrs. Al Kaufman and daughter Rosalind. During the afternoon the guests and their hosts motored in several machines to San Mateo, where they visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Carp.

The last meeting and social of La Fiesta Club was held last Friday at the home of Mrs. Lorraine Wall. After spending a pleasant evening the guests sat down to an artistically decorated table, in keeping with the Easter spirit. A progressive dinner has been planned by the members, to be held Saturday night, April 28. The next meeting will be held by Miss Eleanor Boyle, April 12, at her home. Those attending were Mesdames Christine Hulme, Edna Peterson, Louise Eliassen, Sylvia Fischer, Lee Sullivan and Annette Drury, and Misses Marge O'Connor, Tess O'Connor, Nonie Healey and Eleanor Boyle.

Mrs. Catherine Wight, of Woodrow street, entertained at a family dinner on Easter Sunday, having as her guests Mr. and Mrs. N. Wittenberg, Mrs. Art Wilson and daughter Leona Wilson, Miss Norma Wight, Misses Evelyn McGuire and Janet McGuire, and Mr. D. Rourke.

The many friends of Anne Hoffman, the dancing teacher, were shocked to hear of her untimely death, last Friday, after a very brief illness, in a San Francisco hospital. This popular girl made many friends in Daly City. Among the local residents who attended the funeral in Cypress Lawn cemetery last Monday were Mrs. Rosenberg and her daughter Roselyn, and Mrs. Charles Wheat and her daughter Alice.

Mr. and Mrs. F. B. McDermott and children, of Templeton avenue, were among the guests who attended the eighth annual Easter breakfast given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. McGinnigle, of Tenth avenue, San Francisco, Easter Sunday morning. The table decorations were carried out in Easter colors. After a delightful breakfast, the following guests enjoyed an Easter egg hunt: Mr. and Mrs. F. B. McDermott and children, Bernard and Anna Mae, Miss Mayme Sullivan, Miss Veronica Sullivan, Mrs. Lawrence Tierney, Harry Seiber, Stanley Noe, and Mrs. Janet Ayres.

Last Saturday evening Miss Alice Ryan and Mr. Dea Richards, of San Francisco, were guests at a surprise shower given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Vlassof, of Third avenue, San Francisco. The home was beautifully decorated for the occasion. At midnight the guests sat down to an artistically decorated table, the centerpiece being spring flowers with place cards and small bridal couples at each one's place, while a huge bride's cake adorned the table. The young couple will be married the latter part of April. They received a beautiful electric crockery percolator. Flashlights were taken of the guests at the table. Those attending were Mr. and Mrs. Bob Wall, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Smith, of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Keith, of San Francisco, Misses Tess and Marge O'Connor and Alice Ryan, Messrs. Kay Sorenson, John Sullivan, Dea Richards and Mr. and Mrs. Vlassof.

More than $24,000,000 in gold coin, gold certificates and bullion was returned under the Treasury antihoarding order.

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

(By the Class in Journalism.)
Robert Burns, field representative of the College of the Pacific, recently presented a very amusing and interesting program for the members of the student body. A group of students contributed to the entertainment, giving several amusing skits, a few piano solos, and a baritone solo.

The captain of the girls' clubs met to divide each club into two separate basketball teams, team A and team B. Clubs I and IV have two teams, while Clubs II and III have but one. Fifteen games are scheduled to be played so that all of the girls may get their credits. Those who have F's or incompletes are not allowed to play until their work is completed and their grades brought up.

A record crowd attended the performance of the mystery-comedy "At the Stroke of Twelve," which was given on the last Thursday before vacation. More than two-thirds of the students saw the play. Those who took part in "At the Stroke of Twelve" were the following: Verle Kiehlley, as the colored maid; Rita Sadler, a cranky old maid; Berta Ford, her niece; Doris Robertson, a gossip neighbor, and Walter Fati, who impersonated a ghost and succeeded in obtaining the superstitious aunt's consent to marry her niece. Other students taking part were: Frank Tringali, who played several selections on his violin; Rita Sadler with her eccentric mountaineer dance; Gerald Barton, who sang to the accompaniment of Corinne Pauw, and Elaine Wadiker and the versatile Rita Sadler, who completed the program with a military dance.

Completing what was a comparatively active last week of school, an assembly on aviation was held Friday, March 23. Mr. Paterson was in charge of the program, and he introduced Mr. Van Haitsma, a representative of the Boeing School of Aeronautics at Oakland. Three motion picture films were presented. Mr. Van Haitsma later answered questions for students who desired information on aviation, and quite a few took advantage of this opportunity. Mr. Van Haitsma stressed the fact that a high school education is required before one may enter for training in aeronautics. Proper care of the body is another essential requirement.

Miss Mary Lesnick, of Roosevelt street, has returned home from St. Luke's hospital, where she underwent a major operation. She is recovering very nicely, according to reports of Dr. A. O. Skankey.

The production of peppermint oil and menthol has long been one of Japan's most important industries.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

Note: The San Mateo County Department of Public Health and Welfare gives, each week in this column, a list of the contagious diseases reported in the cities and rural districts in the county. The California law requires that all contagious diseases be reported promptly to the local health officer, and that the city health officer give a weekly summary of all diseases to the county health officer.

One of the most frequent requests coming to every public health officer is for the testing of water which is suspected of being unsafe. The most common cause of such suspicion is bad taste; but the fact is that the dangerous germs in water do not cause any bad taste, while the worst tasting elements in water are not at all dangerous. Laboratory tests of water are of little value compared with care in the prevention of human contamination. This is clearly explained in the following quotation from Bulletin No. 11, California State Bureau of Laboratories, by W. H. Kellogg, M. D., Chief.

"Water may be really unsafe from very few causes. These causes are the presence of disease producing bacteria or of harmful mineral ingredients. The latter can be ruled out at once for the reason that in all the years of our experience we have never encountered in California a natural water that would be harmful by reason of mineral content, excepting in certain desert localities."

The species of bacteria capable of producing disease are few in number. When present they come from some previous human case of the disease, and are never present in water except when freshly polluted by human sewage. The bacteria causing typhoid and dysentery can not be detected in water, even when present, by laboratory methods. We can only, by the finding of evidence of sewage pollution, say that if cases of these diseases exist in the vicinity, the water may carry the germs. The laboratory test, therefore, shows only sewage pollution and not specific disease germs.

Since we cannot distinguish between pollution of human and of animal origin, and since contamination from animal sources is not capable of producing disease, an investigation of the source of the water with respect to the possibilities of human contamination is usually more important than the laboratory test. It is for this reason that the state laboratory discourages the sending in of samples of water from private sources.

Discussion of this important subject will be continued next week. Questions will be welcomed and carefully answered.

DALY CITY COUNCIL MEETS MONDAY NIGHT

An adjourned meeting of the Daly City Council was held last Monday night, when the City Clerk was instructed to send a letter to the Board of Underwriters, asking that a survey be made in the Colma section with a view to obtaining for the property owners a reduction in insurance rates, by reason of the new hydrants recently installed in that section.

It was reported that forty men were to go to work on the reservoir, starting Monday, April 9. The work at this time is being done by the county bond money, pending a new setup to take the place of the Civil Works Administration.

REV. CHARLES L. DUNCAN IN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Rev. Charles L. Duncan, former pastor of Grace Presbyterian church, will be the speaker on Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service at the Presbyterian church. Rev. Mr. Duncan was once a popular pastor, especially with the younger people of the church, and will be welcomed by those who know him. The quartet will sing "Out of the Ivory Palaces." In the evening, at 7:45, services will be held to which strangers in the community are especially welcome.

Hartley Heirs Win Will Contest
The heirs of Mrs. Jennie Hartley, former assistant superintendent of schools in San Mateo county, who died four years ago, last Saturday won their fight in the state district court of appeals to prevent executors of her estate from giving $40,000 to the Bank of America Trust & Savings Association.

Fanting, but placid, Mrs. Hammel wove her way into the gallery. Anne, squeezed behind her and her two distinguished companions, edged down the crowded steps to the designated places, and settled down to look about her.

The senators' gallery was already packed to the last row, except for the unoccupied seats which were roped off for Mrs. Shaw, the President's wife. There was a shining brass plate on the balcony railing, she noticed, requesting visitors not to lean their elbows or place small personal possessions upon it; and she wondered why so trivial a thing should have caught her attention. All the galleries were crowded, and the one above the clock back of the rostrum, the press gallery, was seething.

The senate chamber, Anne thought, as she resumed her contemplation of it, was strangely unimpressive for so important an apartment. It was drab, dingy, close. The senators were beginning to come in now—not very impressive, either! Anne was disappointed. Many of them were bald; nearly all of them were gray; some were very lean or badly overweight. One, dressed with faultless informality, a dark carnation in his buttonhole, was quite superfluously, striking attitudes. His roving eyes caught Anne's, and rested for a moment on her face; then he bowed slightly. She felt quite sure she had not met him, but she returned the salutation, angry at herself for blushing, and conscious that Mrs. Standish, whom nothing seemed to escape, was watching her.

"Senator Lassiter," this lady remarked, her sweet voice a trifle dry, "the Beau Brummell of the senate. Also—ah—the Lovelace. I believe you know Clarence Hathaway? Well, something the same type."

Anne was grateful for the rap of the Vice President's gavel. The chaplain offered prayer. Anne, watching Neal, was experiencing a deeper emotion than interest; she was remembering, poignantly, the day she had joined the church, the testimony to her faith that she had given before the assembled congregation in the bare little building with its slender spire pointing towards the green hills behind it. This oath that Neal was taking seemed to her no less solemn, no less sacred—did he, she wondered, feel the same way about it? She hoped, prayerfully, that he did.

At all events, he had not forgotten her in this great and pregnant moment of his life. He had hardly taken his seat when he turned, swept the gallery with his keen eyes, and smiled as he found her and saw the expression of love and emotion on her face. For a moment they looked full at each other; Anne felt her composure returning, her vision clearing. She was able to return his smile. Then, apparently satisfied, he nodded, and looked away again, giving his undivided attention to the business of the day.

This did not last long. The Vice President's gavel descended. The crowd began to stream out. Anne was conscious that Mrs. Hammel was speaking to her.

"You'll come to the house, tomorrow, of course, and hear the President read his message?"

"Oh, of course! I wouldn't miss it for anything!"

As a matter of fact, she had not intended to do anything of the sort; her interest in public affairs was still bounded by Neal's participation in them; and Neal, who had been a figure of importance today, would have no part in the morrow's proceedings. But it was evident that Mrs. Hammel expected her to return to the Capitol the next day; and Mrs. Hammel should never be disappointed in her.

Her determination was rewarded. When Neal came home that night, he gave her a beautifully engraved little card, upon the back of which she discovered the number, row and section of a reserved seat. Armed with this, she penetrated to the house of representatives without difficulty; and, having found her appointed place, she saw that Mrs. Hammel, Mrs. Hastings, and several other women whom she knew were all near her, and when Mrs. Shaw, accompanied by a military aide, came in and sat down immediately in front of her, she experienced an unexpected thrill in being presented to the first lady of the land. And, after that, the President, with his escort of senators and representatives, advanced slowly, and mounted the rostrum, dignity and power emanating from his presence. When the President began to speak Anne's sense of stimulation increased—she listened with rapt attention.

Suddenly she realized that her attention had begun to wander, perhaps because she was hungry. She was relieved when the President stopped reading and inclined his head to acknowledge the applause of his listeners. Mrs. Shaw, bowing graciously in every direction, was preparing to leave the gallery; and Mrs. Hammel, touching Anne's arm, was asking her a question.

"You are coming over to the luncheon, of course?"

"The luncheon?"

"Yes—the senate ladies' luncheon. Don't tell me there is another thing you haven't heard about! Well, I will explain as we go over in the subway. We will say goodbye to Mrs. Standish and Mrs. Hastings here. They don't come with us."

Breathlessly, Anne followed Mrs. Hammel through the crowd to the basement of the Capitol, and into a small open electric car. It was full already, but Mrs. Hammel, bowing right and left, was immediately afforded space for herself and Anne. The little car leapt forward, and they bounded noisily away. By raising her voice, Mrs. Hammel succeeded in making Anne hear her above the clatter.

"Every Tuesday, Marble room in the senate office building. Take turns acting as hostesses. Six at a time. Cold meat, salad, rolls, coffee, cake, no more allowed. Can't have competition in menus. Make feeling. I'm the president. Great fun. You'll see. Here we are. Get out."

The marble room proved a most imposing apartment. Down its wide length ran a long narrow table, covered with a white cloth. Thermos bottles, plates of rolls and jelly, and large heavily frosted cakes were placed upon this at regular intervals; and several well-dressed women were fluttering about it, pouring water and straightening silverware. Another group was clustered about a smaller table in a remote corner, almost concealing the platters of cold meat and salad with which they were occupied. The hostesses were already beginning to pass the great platters of cold meat and salad. There was a good deal of informal merriment—a much pleasanter medium for getting acquainted, Anne reflected, this luncheon, than those stiff brief calls. A few of the women she had met already. They welcomed her cordially and presented her to others. When the rich, moist cakes had been eaten—from the same dishes on which the meat and salad had been served—Mrs. Hammel rose in her place at the end of the long table, and announced the names of the hostesses for the following week—Mrs. Bean, Mrs. Brainard, Miss Bullard, Mrs. Clay, Mrs. Conrad. Anne found herself carried off for a conference. A salad, it was decided, was to be her contribution—and would she please plan to be a little early, the following Thursday, to help with preparations? The hostesses usually did.

The merry little party broke up when the deliberations of the committee were finished. The morning after the senate ladies' luncheon, Mrs. Lee called Anne on the telephone, and asked if she might not stop and take her to the Congressional club reception on Friday.

"You have had an invitation to join, of course?"

"Yes—but you see I have been so busy making diplomatic calls—"

"I know—it is hard to wedge both the calls and the clubs in the same afternoon. But everything is over at the club a little after five, and that leaves almost another hour for calls afterwards. If you are pretty well caught up couldn't you manage somehow?"

"I believe I could; especially as I would love to go to the club with you," Anne said frankly.

"I am so glad, for I would love to take you," responded Mrs. Lee cordially. "Promptly at 2:45 then."

In her eagerness to be prompt, Anne was standing on the steps of her house, watching the street in both directions when Mrs. Lee drove up; and as she took her place beside the older lady in the big limousine, Mrs. Lee regarded her with covert but thorough approbation. Anne had on a dress and coat of sapphire blue velvet, with close-fitting collar and cuffs of ermine; and her sapphire blue velvet hat was faced with white satin. Her white gloves, her suede shoes, and the beaded bag which she carried were all perfectly in keeping.

"Usually we have a program on Friday afternoons," Mrs. Lee explained, "a concert or a lecture, or something like that; then a short reception afterwards. But as this is our first gathering of the season, the afternoon is entirely given over to the reception—it is so pleasant, isn't it, to have this meeting place for seeing our friends?"

The crowd suddenly surged forward, bearing Mrs. Lee and Anne with it up the stairs, and into the great oval room at the top. Near the pillars at the entrance, in front of a little alcove cushioned in green velvet, the president of the club, Mrs. Gray, and the two first vice presidents, Mrs. Gorham and Mrs. Bean, were standing to receive the guests. At the front end of the room, the Marine band, gorgeous in the scarlet, gold and blue of full dress uniform, was playing. In a little dining room beyond, an enormous basket of American beauty roses towered between two silver candelabra, on a table spread with a lace cloth and covered with delicacies. Mrs. Hastings sat at one end pouring tea and Mrs. Lassiter at the other pouring coffee; they both greeted Anne cordially, and Mrs. Lassiter detained her for a moment.

"My son and I were sorry to miss you when we called yesterday," she said. "Have you and Senator Conrad, by any miracle, a free evening next week or the week after? We would like so much to have you dine with us—"

Last Word in Bridal Veilcraft

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

AS TO lovely and chic bridal array for the late spring and the summer bride, fashion is positively lavish in offering suggestions which are entirely new and novel.

Pretty as a wedding dress may be, it is, after all, the veiling of the bride, together with the various little accessory items of adornment, which make or mar the picture. The wealth of ideas offered in both veils and headpieces and accompanying fantasies is positively thrilling this season.

Time was when the bride-to-be bought yards and yards of tulle, depending on the magic touch of some good fairy who would appear at the last moment to adjust the veil to a point of enchantment. Of course this entailed endless worry and suspense and more times than not ended in keen disappointment.

However, in this present day of efficiency all this uncertainty as to the final touch to the veil has been done away with and a new order of procedure takes its place. The modern bride-to-be goes to the leading millinery department or her favorite shop and asks to be shown the latest and most fetching in bridal adornment. The visions of loveliness which the salespeople will bring forth are enough to make the eyes of any prospective bride dance with joy. Think of it—the entire ensemble all thought out for you down to the last orange blossom bud.

One of the first items of news which will be imparted to the enquiring bride-to-be is that streamline effects are the last word in wedding veilcraft. Which means that there is going to be a symmetry, a very poetry of motion about the billowy masses of tulle which veil the springtime bride which will delight and satisfy all who behold. You see the idea conveyed in the exquisite lace-trimmed veil to the left in the picture—a model which is now showing in the better millinery establishments. Note that the veil is supported at the top of the close-fitting cap of Chantilly lace in coronet or tiara effect. Of course you have noted the huge lace rosettes, one at each side, which seem to have fluttered down into position on the sweeping wide veil. They bring a message of real news in regard to bridal veil styling for spring-summer, 1934.

And her flower muff! Flower muffs are the correct thing for the modern bride to carry. What's more, the bride's attendants will be carrying them, too, but in fresh springy colors which no word describes so perfectly as "delicious."

Here's something those seeking style hints should know. It is about cunning little flanged molded-to-shape face veils which brides are wearing—ever so flattering! Then, too, it is interesting to note that bridesmaids' hats are sporting tremendously wide brims of maline. These in a galaxy of springtime colorings are wonderfully picturesque and becoming. In some instances the bride's attendants are carrying quaint colonial bouquets with wide ruffles of maline encircling the prim cluster of wee flowerets, the maline matching the wide maline brim of each hat.

And now this recital of lovely bridal fantasies must be brought to an end but not until we call attention to the resplendent Spanish lace veil on the bride pictured to the right. It is done in true Spanish mantilla effect.

LACE REAPPEARING IN VARIOUS HUES

You just can't keep a good fashion down. With spring dance frocks growing more feminine and alluring by the minute, lace was certain to stage a reappearance, after having been more or less out of the picture for winter.

A black frock, in one of the new circle or cord laces, is just about the most satisfactory evening frock that anyone can own. And a white lace dress, worn with bright colored slippers and accessories, is a fetching youthful fashion.

This spring, however, there is unusual emphasis on colored laces. French women are choosing navy blue lace over satin or taffeta slips, in place of black. Green lace, in lovely leafy shades, makes enchanting evening dresses. One very effective model is made with a trained skirt, fitted around the hips, and with soft fullness at the hemline. The bodice is made with a hip-length peplum, divided in front and shirred at the back to match the fullness in the back of the skirt.

Definite Leaning Toward Swagger Suits Observed

No one is going to put the American girl in uniform this spring. . . . Suits are as varied as the weather, which gives room for practically a daily design.

There is a definite leaning toward the swagger suit, no doubt due to all this windblown talk which is effective . . . if it does sound a little chilly.

These swaggers come in practically full length coats, frequently tied under the neck, but in bows, not ascots. The coats have the full sleeve, hang loosely and are not made to be wrapped around. Skirts have wide self-cloth belts and often the button which marks the belt closing is repeated on the blouse.

Sequin Stoles Appear

Long straight stole scarfs of sequins or lame are draped about the shoulders as an accompaniment to frocks of the same fabric.

WITH BOLERO

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A woman who keeps pace with the times cannot get by without at least one long-sleeved, floor-length dress which sets her apart from the daytime world of practical clothes, and stamps her as a lady of the new leisure. This gown of all-day crepe, the new rayon woven of tubize yarn acetate and tubize viscose yarn is in a new shade called orange bisque. Its simple flowing lines make it a dress of graceful and becoming dignity. Outstanding style points to remember include the bolero effect and the deep armhole sleeves, also the girdle-tie of self fabric.

TOM'S FLIRT

STAN'S expression was that of a man welcoming a bill collector as Lieut. Thomas Halloway, U. S. N., tapped his arm.

"Break, please!" Tom said, looking dark and handsome . . . handsomer, perhaps, because he was utterly unaware of his velvet brown eyes, the inflexible chin line, the not too damaging wave in ebony hair.

Then she looked up, her gaze all blue and misty like the gentians of her senator-father's native state.

She didn't look away as Tom slipped an arm about her waist and glided her across the floor, in a series of intricate steps.

She just stared into his eyes as though she had never before seen him, which, he remembered suddenly, was only too true!

The way his heart had jerked beneath the brass buttons of his dress uniform! . . . why confound it all! . . . he had known her an eon of nights such as this!

"I didn't see you at the White House reception to-night!" he whispered to the golden curls nestled on his breast. "You're so lovely, I would have remembered."

"Flatterer!"

The voice was a southern melody. Tom's dark brows shot together.

"I say, you aren't engaged, married, or anything . . .?"

"No-o-o-o-o!"

"Well—elegant! You know . . . I've got a hunch . . . that . . . you and I . . ."

But in the next instant Janice was in the arms of Hungary's colorful, Count Gondos, and Tom, cursing the "cutting system" of Washington's country clubs, weaved his way to the stag line.

He stood there, inches taller than any of the others, his eyes on the floating grace of a tiny figure in an odd colored magenta dress.

"I'd like to knock Janice's teeth out or ring her nose," he wished truculently, "just to warn these mugs that it's 'hand-off'!"

Then the color flamed beneath the gold-edged collar and the veins in his neck became livid welts.

Six times he watched diplomats, navy and army officers "cut" on Janice in quick succession!

Six times he watched, with absurd jealousy, her shadow-lit eyes turn adoringly upon their rapt faces . . . just the same as she had smiled upon him! So-o-o-o! A flirt! Well! Let her But not with Tom Halloway!

He would march down the walks of life to dotage and false teeth before she could "make" him!

He crossed the ballroom, with the impressive strides of four years at Annapolis, beating Stan to Janice by a split second.

"You're a flirt!" he began, offering no exegesis.

"That's a lousy thing to be!" "Oh-h-h-h!" The heart break of the world was concentrated in that tiny word.

"I hate a flirt! If half of these men weren't foreign, they'd see through you!" he continued, with scorn.

"I just 'cut' in to tell you that no girl like you will ever get anywhere with a fellow like me because . . ."

"Because . . .?" she prodded.

But the reason was as lost as the lost chord, for Count Gondos' "Break, please," relieved Tom of Janice before the words could escape his lips.

At the midnight supper, seated at a table directly across from Janice, Tom listened with depraved curiosity to bits of her conversation with Stan and Count Gondos.

He had a sudden prurient desire to know everything about her, even to the make of her bath soap . . . intimate, revealing little things!

He learned among other facts that she was tired of the Capital, that she was returning home at dawn. Two thousand miles away!

Gosh! Not that he cared, of course! With mounting indignation he watched her lift her "I've-been-saving-some-time-for-you" eyes to Stan and then to Count Gondos; he watched her stare at dozens of West Point men who peppered the crystal reflected whiteness that is the Chevy Chase club's dining hall.

But when she turned her lovely, wistful gaze on him, a look as intimate as a kiss, he deliberately, perversely sneered.

The mouth that so many debutantes had sighed over, turned down in one corner, curved viciously at the other, in a silent execration of her.

Janice's eyes widened and her lips circled into another wounded "oh!"

Then he rose from the table, slammed his napkin to his plate and stalked out of the hall, his face crimsoning in the consciousness that Janice's eyes, and diplomatic and fashionable Washington, followed his departing form.

"She couldn't be satisfied with Stan and Gondos! Nor ogling all the brass buttons in the room!" he thought, rationally.

"No! She must 'make' me, too! Well! The President's little naval aide's scalp is intact!"

If a few hours before he had wanted to knock her teeth out and ring her nose to prove ownership, he ached now to do it for an entirely different reason. Or so he imagined!

Tom was standing on the balcony staring out across the undulating white of the snow-covered golf course that stretches to Wisconsin avenue when Janice came up to his side and touched her fingertips to his coat sleeve.

He turned and felt the blood change first to ice and then to molten lava in his veins as she stared into his eyes.

"Why do you hate me?" she asked, her face decidedly puzzled.

"You were so . . . nice 'at first! Then all of a sudden you 'cut' and accused me of being a . . . flirt! And you've spent the whole evening glaring at me! Why?"

"Gazing? Pfft!"

He was indignant. "But you did glare and you made a face at me, too!"

"A face?"

A blow to the courtly formality of his uniform!

"Well, hardly! Sometimes I give the impression of glaring but I'm not even looking!"

"Oh!" she paled visibly. "I would rather you glared than not to look at all!"

She turned on her sandal and started toward the ballroom.

But Tom clapped down on her frail little wrist, bruisingly, and drew her back.

"Listen!" he said, needlessly, for she literally hung on his every word. "I want to tell you what I really think of you before you go away! I have been watching you!" And in a few eloquent words he relegated Janice and all her orb-luring, vamping, flirting kind to the ash-heap.

Instead of wailing, as she should, she laughed.

"Oh, Tom! I wasn't luring them! I was looking at their eyes to see if their pupils dilated alike!"

Tom snorted.

Why did all the girls who were beautiful and charming have to be nit-wits!

Tap this one's brain now and nothing would run out but clothes and rotten alibis like that! . . . and maybe a moth! And she, with one of the most brilliant senators on the hill for a father!

Now the little face was terrified.

"But, Tom, it's true! My left pupil is larger! The oculist told me yesterday that it was a temporary nervous condition from over-studying . . ."

"Over-studying?"

"That was a laugh, all right! A dumb dora like this one!"

"You see, Tom . . . I graduated from George Washington last June . . . with highest honors. I've been looking for my partner's eyes tonight to see if anyone else has one big pupil. I sort of hate to be . . . different!"

Lieutenant Halloway lowered his head to hers.

Her eyes, close like that, were breath-takingly gorgeous, and there, in the left sapphire was a pupil a little larger than its sparkling right companion.

"JANICE!"

His heart leaped against his uniform. It was an effort not to kiss her!

But even as he pushed her and the temptation away, she clung to him, her lovely fingers plucking at his brass buttons.

"Tom . . . she went on, softly, "I wasn't looking to see if you had a big pupil . . . I was looking . . . because . . ."

"Gee!" Tom sighed, and crushed the words out against her lips with his own avid ones.

Ruthless Grave Robbers

Ruin Indian Remains

Archeologists, and particularly those of the Smithsonian Institution, are very much concerned over the evidence of vandalism, the ruthless looting of Indian graves and village sites, that is now accumulating. In the South and Southwest especially, the so-called "pot hunters" have been increasingly active in recent months destroying many sites in which lie artifacts and human remains which would tell the story of America's rich past, says the Scientific American.

These valuable relics of the past are being sold as souvenirs to tourists. Gasoline filling stations all over the Southwest offer for sale human skulls to be used by their purchasers as ash trays, mantel ornaments, or for Hallows'en parties. Many such antiquities are offered to museums, it is true, but having once been removed from their original locations, they do not as a rule have any meaning to the archeologist. Exact and highly technical data as to its location and perhaps its position in relation to other articles or ash and earth deposits are necessary before the story to be told by a skull or a pot can be read.

Once these treasures are removed, their story is lost to science. This is to be regretted, for there is much yet to be learned about America's pre-Columbian history. If tourists refuse to buy these relics; if local papers condemn the practice of removing them; and if public sentiment awakened to the value of science agitates against this robbing of graves, we believe much of the real background story of America may yet be solved.

Originated Campaign Song

The campaign song, "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too," which was to the Harrison campaign in 1840 what the Marseillaise was to the French Revolution, was thought out in the mind of its author, A. C. Ross of Zanesville, Ohio, as he sat in the choir loft listening to the Sunday sermon. As the preacher started the sermon, Ross, choir director, began to think out the composition and when the services closed he had the entire song completed—words and tune.

WE ARE ON OUR WAY BACK

The news comes from Washington, D. C., that the administration's challenge to industry to aid recovery by cutting hours of employment and raising the pay of the workers has been met in whole or part by the employers of more than a million men in our country.

Favorable developments brighten many fronts as the nation enters a spring of predicted further business improvement.

It should seem quite evident to the most pessimistic that we are on our way back to better times; that we are rounding the corner of depression, the silver lining is coming within view, and we will soon be in better condition in every way.

It has been a long, hard, up-hill pull, but better times are bound to come.

WHITE COLLAR JOBS

"Boys should be taught to think less of fitting themselves for 'white collar jobs'", says Prof. F. G. Nichols, of Harvard, who points out the greater opportunities for promotion in industry than in clerical pursuits.

The young man who starts at the bottom in a factory often outdistances one who, say, begins as a bookkeeper. The idea is that while the clerk or bookkeeper may have a white collar job from the very first, the ambitious and intelligent industrial worker has a better chance to rise to an executive position, so that when he does reach the white collar job it means something worth while.

Advice along a similar line is given by President Thatcher of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, who defends vocational schools against the reproach sometimes leveled against them by the classical student. He says that "the idea is erroneous that vocational schools are undignified because they work with materials near at hand and not with a knowledge of things that are ancient and far off."

Literally, however, the proportion of white collar jobs is constantly increasing. With the continual advent of new machines for doing the "dirty work" of the world, the time may come when nearly everyone may have a "white collar" job.

CINCHING A JOB

A few years ago, at the age of 79, Thomas F. Ryan died, worth many millions of dollars. But, so far as the had given away a lot of money also. But, so far as the main facts of his life were concerned, they do not differ greatly from those of other poor boys who have risen to wealth and power.

A little story is told, however, which may give some insight into the manner in which young Ryan got his start toward great riches. His first job was with a Baltimore dry goods store, where he was hired for $3 a week and told to report for work the next morning. Now, he was in earnest about that job and didn't want to take any chances on letting it get away from him, so he said to the boss: "If you don't mind, I'll start right now without any pay for today."

Needless to say, he made good on the job, and two years later, at the age of 19, he obtained employment in Wall Street. At the age of 23 he became a member of the New York Stock Exchange, from which time his rise in the financial world was rapid, and he became one of America's richest men.

Doubtless his remarkable success was due to the spirit which he displayed in cinching his first position—his willingness to "start right now." A good many boys of today might emulate that spirit with profit to themselves.

PLANS FOR LONG TRIP

Numerous ideas hitherto considered utterly fantastic have been advanced concerning the possibility of a trip to the moon or to Mars, but it has remained for a society of French astronomers to take the idea seriously from a scientific standpoint.

Not that these scientists expect to see an actual venture of this kind undertaken in the near future, but for the purpose of studying its possibilities, the new "astronautic commission" has been formed, composed of the most distinguished members of the Astronomical Society of France.

As a beginning a prize of 5,000 francs will be awarded annually for the best original work on any phase of the problem which may contribute to its final solution, on the principle that any progress whatever which may be made will be of scientific value.

While the idea of traveling to Mars and the moon, and particularly the possibility of getting back, appears ridiculous at present, future generations may find a way to do it. Forty years ago most people thought anyone who predicted that man would ever fly at all was a little off in the head.

AMERICANISM DEFINED

The word "Americanism" is used very frequently, but the average person would doubtless find some difficulty in defining it satisfactorily.

Broadly speaking, it is understood to mean an appreciation of and loyalty to America and its institutions. But it means more than a mere passive acceptance of the benefits which are derived from citizenship.

Probably no class of citizens are better qualified to define Americanism than the veterans of the wars which have been waged to defend it. Such a definition was adopted some time ago by the Commanders-in-Chief of five leading veterans' organizations, as follows:

"Americanism is an unflinching love of country; loyalty to its institutions and ideals; eagerness to defend it against all enemies; undivided allegiance to the flag, and a desire to secure the blessing of liberty to ourselves and posterity."

Persons who can qualify under that definition are truly Americans, whether native-born or naturalized.

FATHER OF RURAL MAIL

Rural free delivery of mail is now so generally established throughout the country that the farm boy and girl of today take it for granted, and few of them know that its first beginnings were only thirty-six years ago.

Perry Sanford Heath, a newspaper man who died in 1928 at the age of 69, was the father of rural free delivery. Through his activity in behalf of McKinley's election in 1896, Heath became first assistant postmaster general in 1897. With only $30,000 of an unexpanded appropriation for experimental purposes to begin with, he established a few rural routes. The farmers liked the idea, and through Heath's persistence, Congress was induced to appropriate more and more funds for the extension of the service. As a direct result of his vision and zeal, the system of free delivery, which now serves more than thirty million persons, has become one of the greatest benefits which the government confers upon the public.

Every rural mail box in the land is a modest monument to Perry Heath.

From Paris comes news of an invention which should be hailed with enthusiasm by the motoring public. It is an automatic jack to be operated from the instrument board of the automobile. In case of a flat tire the driver may raise the wheel by simply pressing a button. Each wheel is supplied with a jack in the form of a steel cylinder fitted with a double telescopic piston. When not in use the lower end of the jack is drawn up level with the axle, so as not to reduce the road clearance.

The advantage of having a car equipped with such a device would be greater than its mere convenient operation. The jack would be there when it was needed. It could not be taken by thieves, and neighbors could not borrow it.

FEATHER RIVER ROAD COMPLETION BY 1936

Completion of the Feather River highway by July, 1936, to be urged by a rally of good roads leaders at Oroville on April 27, will require early action to secure funds so that additional contracts can be let during the present biennium. Certain bridges must be built earlier than originally planned in order to permit progress on an accelerated schedule, and one of the bridges should be commenced by September this year.

This is the purport of a statement received by the California Automobile Association from Earl Lee Kelly, director of the State Department of Public Works, reviewing the present status of the work and indicating the changed program required for the completion of the highway within two years.

"Owing to difficulty of access and necessity for construction of certain bridges to reach portions of the grading work on a forced schedule, the normal schedule of operations must be altered and a careful co-ordination of progress must be arranged," said Mr. Kelly. This will necessitate, at an early date, before the close of the present biennium, additional contract work for which funds have not been budgeted.

The last mentioned work includes, for instance, four structures which would have to be built before the end of the present biennium to permit progress for completion of the road by July 1, 1936. These are estimated to cost $216,000. On such a schedule one of the structures should be undertaken by September, 1934, as there is no other means of reaching work beyond it."

Under the current budget $5,886,327 will have been expended on the Feather River highway. An additional $1,330,000 will be required to complete grading and oiling the highway to Quincy and $1,029,000 for surfacing.

Factory Pay Rolls Go Up $12,000,000 in Month

Weekly industrial pay-rolls increased $12,000,000 from January 15 to February 15, and 345,000 persons were re-employed in industries, as announced by Secretary of Labor Perkins. Miss Perkins said figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed a 6.1 per cent gain in factory employment during the same thirty day period, and a 12.6 per cent increase in pay-rolls. Reporting companies had increased workers 2,400,000 between February 15, 1933, and February 15, 1934, and pay-rolls of the same concerns were $67,000,000 greater on February 15 than for the corresponding period last year.

SLIPPING FAN BELT

A slipping fan belt can be temporarily corrected by removing the belt and wrapping strong cord or tape around the pulley, suggests the Emergency Road Service of the California State Automobile Association. This will assist in taking up the slack and increase the traction. Permanent repairs should be made at the first opportunity.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On Tuesday, the 17th day of April, 1934, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., at the front entrance to No. 298 Accacia Street, Bay Shore City, San Mateo County, State of California, Bay View Auxiliary Corporation, a corporation, substituted trustee, will sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash in lawful money of the United States, the real property situated in Bay Shore City, San Mateo County, State of California, described as follows, to-wit:

Lot 25 in Block 13 as designated on the map entitled "Map of the Crocker Estate Tract Subdivision No. 1", which map was filed in the office of the Recorder of the County of San Mateo, State of California, on October 5, 1908, in Volume 588 of Official Records at page 201.

Said sale will be made to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in a certain deed of trust executed by Alice Zimlin, unmarried, and Floyd Peterson, a single man, grantors, to Alfred Bothe and Neil C. Steinbaugh, Trustees for the benefit and security of Bay View Building & Loan Association, a corporation, dated February 18, 1933, and recorded March 7, 1933, in the County Recorder's office of San Mateo County, State of California, in Volume 588 of Official Records at page 201.

Notice of breach of said obligation and election to sell said real property was recorded on the 18th day of November, 1933, in Volume 611 of Official Records at page 153. This notice is given in compliance with the demand heretofore made on the Bay View Auxiliary Corporation, substituted trustee, by Bay View Building & Loan Association, a corporation.

Dated: March 22, 1934.

FRIED CHICKEN BATTLE A DRAW

Breaded or Battered? Answer to Suit Yourself.

By EDITH M. BARRER

I HOPE you are not tired of hearing debates as to when fried chicken is fried chicken. It all started when a chef at a large hotel served a banquet to a group from Indiana and dipped the chicken in batter before frying it! All prepared speeches and everything came to a halt while one of the women guests went right out in the kitchen and showed them how to cook chicken Indiana style.

Since then the battle has raged through the press. Shall chicken be "breaded"—shall it be "battered"—shall it be fried in deep fat or sautéed in a little fat—shall it be fried in butter, bacon fat, lard or other shortening—shall it be fried on top of the stove or in the oven? Each person knows the right answer. It usually is decided by the way chicken was fried at home in the old town. I have had the best chicken I have ever eaten in Indiana, Maryland, in New York—and, of course, in Pennsylvania, in the home town. Once I was sure, and even now I am pretty sure, that the only way to fry chicken is not to fry it at all, but to bake it in a hot oven after it has been split in halves, covered with sliced onion and plenty of butter or bacon fat. And yet, just the other day, I watched a woman fry chicken in deep fat, saw it and tasted it later and admitted that it was a much better color than oven-fried chicken and that it tasted—well—almost as good as my old favorite. So there you are!

I have been collecting chicken recipes for a long time. Whenever I have been visiting—and that usually means being served with chicken some time or other, I have asked for the recipe, when it was especially good. I hardly dare print these recipes under the titles which I have given them according to the places of origin. I am sure that some one from North Carolina is going to rise in wrath and tell me that I have attached that grand old Southern title to the wrong method—and so on, down the list. I have had chicken—a delicious chicken—cooked by the method given in the indicated states.

Chicken gravy is always delicious if properly made. Two good recipes are attached. You may omit the milk and use all water or part water and cream if you like. Unless you are feeling very flush, you will probably dilute the cream called for in the "Maryland" recipe with milk.

A particularly good sauce to serve instead of gravy with chicken is made by cooking one minced onion, one minced carrot and six sliced mushrooms in a quarter of a cup of butter about five minutes. Then stir in one-quarter cup of flour and let brown slightly. Add two cups of boiling water and one-half cup of cream and stir until smooth and thick. One minced pintolito may be added for color. I don't know what to call this recipe because I worked it out myself. It might be "Sun" chicken.

North Carolina Fried Chicken.

Cut two young chickens in pieces for serving. Squeeze a few drops of lemon over each piece and season with salt and pepper. Beat two eggs and add one tablespoon of milk. Dip each piece in this mixture and then roll in flour. Brown the chicken in plenty of fat, then cover the pan and let cook over a slow fire until tender. Cut into small pieces the chicken

Fails to Get Job

After He Gets Wife

Sacramento, Calif.—Not only did a brilliant idea of a seventy-two-year-old CWA worker fail to solve the problem of keeping a job, but it placed him in a worse position than ever.

The man, whose name was not divulged, was discharged when it was found he was single and had no dependents. Two days later he reappeared at the CWA headquarters and demanded his job.

"I've been to Reno," he said. "I got married. I got a dependent."

Informed that his action didn't help matters, he became indignant.

"If I'd known that, I wouldn't a' got married."

Mountain Lion Called

Coward, Not Jungle King

Hamilton, Mont.—They call him "cougar," puma, panther, painter, and mountain lion, but by any name he's a coward.

Such was the disillusioning statement made here by Lloyd Thompson, former member of the United States biological survey, in discussing his experiences.

"The mountain lion has been called 'the king of the American jungle,' but I doubt if he deserves the title," Thompson said.

"Tales have been told of the cougar's ferocity and of the damage he works on live stock. The lion isn't so ferocious and he doesn't kill so many cattle in Montana any more."

Thompson has killed or captured more than 175 mountain lions, so he should know his subject matter.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

"Deeked" With Diamonds

OFTEN there is inquiry as to the origin of the expression "deeked with diamonds" or "deeked in finery" and similar uses of the term.

This is one instance where a term which would appear to be of far-fetched or involved origin is very simple of explanation. For "deeked" simply means "covered." It is derived from the very legitimate Danish "dekken," which is perhaps more familiar in German for "to cover."

Using it with "in" or as "deeked out in finery" is merely taking a liberty with the term which is accepted by popular usage.

Lion Hunter Obeys CWA Rules on Working Hours

Prescott, Ariz.—Six mountain lion hunters appointed by the Civil Works administration in Yavapai county took the NRA pledge as to working hours. One of them treed and killed three lions, and had a fourth up a tree, when he looked at his watch and found that his work-week was over. He called off his dogs, shouldered his rifle, and went home.

Dogs in United States Involve $80,000,000

New York.—There are about 12,000,000 dogs in the United States and their value does not exceed $48,000,000.

However, when the various food concerns, small animal hospitals, breeding kennels, and other canine industries are considered, the value of the animals rises to $80,000,000, says a pet magazine.

"Talking Book" for the Sightless

A new aid for those handicapped by being deprived of their sight is the "talking book," a combination electric phonograph and radio set entirely contained in a single unit, which when folded may be carried in a suitcase. Developed by the American Foundation for the Blind, the instrument is equipped with various controls that allow for variation in speed of readings and tone of volume of both the radio and talking book reproducer. The Library of Congress will establish talking book libraries throughout the United States for the use of the blind.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

Mary Sullivan, head of the women's police bureau, told of what to my mind is just about the meanest racket in New York. Lonely women who have saved a little money are the victims.

A woman pays a $50 registration fee in a matrimonial bureau. When she is introduced to a man she considers desirable, she pays another $50. A third $50 is due when the wedding occurs.

But the wedding never does take place because the man introduced is in cahoots with the owner of the agency and may be wooing three or four clients at the same time. Policewoman Sullivan has taken the matter up with the district attorney and maybe somebody will go to Sing Sing. Or, better yet, Clinton prison at Dannemora, which is known as Siberia because it's up in the Adirondacks so far from New York that visitors are few and where it does prisoners little good to try to escape, because if the guards don't get them, the weather and wild country do.

Speaking of prisons, John and Emanuel Hernandez pop into my mind. They are forty-five-year-old twins, listed by the police as incurable pickpockets. For a long time, the Hernandez boys worked a smooth racket. When one would be arrested, he would provide an alibi that couldn't be broken down because he and his brother looked so much alike, witnesses got all twisted up. But recently the police attained an ambition of years—they pinched the Hernandez brothers at the same time so the alibi racket is out.

Pickpockets make me think of Waxey Gordon, or rather Irving Wexler, which is his correct name. Waxey started out as a pickpocket, worked up to grand larceny and finally became such a big time racketeer that he was known as Public Enemy No. 1—all that within the space of 28 years. Then the government got him on an income tax evasion charge and he was sentenced to pay $80,000 fine and serve ten years. He's in Northeastern penitentiary now, the government having stepped in just as he was putting his affairs in order to retire with his wife and family to sunny California.

Conviction of Waxey Gordon carried with it more than a heavy fine and imprisonment for a term of years. Gordon's oldest son, a boy in whom he took great pride, was hurrying back from military school in the South to help his father. There was an automobile accident and the boy was killed. Waxey got the news in the Tombs—and wept. And he was sent to a prison in the same state in which his son lost his life. Possibly he'll do a lot of thinking behind the bars.

Passing along to something more cheerful, there is Geraldine Farrar. She comes to mind because I saw her going into the Metropolitan opera house the other evening. It was the first glimpse of the singer in years, and the whiteness of her hair was rather startling. Still it is becoming. She was laughing and chatting with a party of friends. At fifty-two, Geraldine Farrar finds life pleasant, indeed.

Miss Farrar retired from opera 12 years ago and from concert two years ago. She spends much of her time at her Ridgefield (Conn.) estate. Her father, the former baseball star, is with her. She has a half dozen or more dogs, plenty of books, and there are trees and flowers. She comes to town often and not infrequently attends the Metropolitan. When the opera was in money difficulties last year, her plan helped raise the $300,000 needed. Summers, she travels abroad.

Dropped into an uptown establishment where a polite young Greek makes my shoes gleam—and thanks me for a nickel tip. He wasn't on hand and the boss explained that he was over in Brooklyn collecting rents. "He owns an apartment house, you know," added his employer with a touch of admiration in his voice.

My Neighbor Says:

ALWAYS keep a roll of glued paper and a ball of twine in your kitchen, to use when tying and labeling bundles.

Toast will toast better and taste better if the slices of bread are placed in the oven a little while before putting into toaster.

To give a bright luster to your kitchen range put a few drops of turpentine in the blacking.

After putting the icing on a cake, set cake in a warm oven (not hot) for a few minutes. It puts a pretty gloss on the icing.

Mud Turtle's Heart Can Withstand Intense Cold

Pittsburgh.—The mud turtles probably smiled broadly as Americans suffered under temperatures of 50 or more below zero.

An experiment with liquid air at the University of Pittsburgh showed the living heart of a turtle able to withstand a temperature of 320 below zero.

Although the heart was immersed in the freezing liquid for ten minutes, it recovered fully within 45 minutes. In a previous experiment two goldfish were placed in the liquid for three seconds. When removed one was thrown against a wall and shattered like a piece of glass. The other was placed in ice water and within a half hour was swimming about normally.

The Iroquois Interpreter

IN THE courthouse at Canandaigua, N. Y., hangs the portrait of a man who was once "a leading citizen" of that place. But that characterization tells only the least interesting part of the story of Jasper Parrish, interpreter for the Iroquois.

Born at Windham, Conn., in 1767, as a boy he was taken by his parents to the headwaters of the Delaware river in New York where they were living at the outbreak of the Revolution. In 1778 eleven-year-old Jasper was carried away by a raiding party of Muncie Indians who sold him a few months later for $20 to a Delaware Indian family. For the next two years he lived as an Indian boy and learned to speak the Delaware tongue.

At that time the Delawares were under the domination of the Iroquois, or Six Nations, and after the defeat of the Iroquois by General Sullivan in 1779 some of the Delawares accompanied their masters to Fort Niagara. There Jasper was sold again for $20, this time to a Mohawk called Capt. David Hill. For the next five years he lived among the Mohawks, learning their tongue as he had learned the Muncie and the Delaware and finally being adopted into the tribe.

After the Revolution, under the terms of the treaty of 1784 between the Six Nations and the United States by which the Iroquois agreed to give up their white prisoners, young Parrish was set free and traced his long-lost family to Goshen, N. Y., where he joined them. Then began a slow and painful process for the "White Indian" of learning again his native tongue and of thinking and acting as a white man.

By 1792 the Iroquois were becoming restless under the increasing pressure of white settlement and President Washington appointed Gen. Israel Chapin of Massachusetts as agent to them. Needing an interpreter and learning that young Parrish not only was skilled in all the six dialects of the Iroquois but that he had their confidence and love as well, Chapin appointed him official interpreter.

In 1803 President Jefferson appointed Parrish sub-agent to the Six Nations and so well did he perform the tasks of that office that he was continued in it during the next administrations—those of Madison, Monroe, Adams and Jackson—a record of continuous service by an Indian agent which has few, if any, equals. It was mainly due to Parrish's influence over the Iroquois that they remained loyal to the United States, instead of joining the British, at the outbreak of the War of 1812, and to the day of his death in 1836 Parrish held their esteem and used it to promote better relations between red men and white.

"Envoy Extraordinary"

IN THE spring of 1848 a ragged frontiersman entered the stage station at Wheeling, W. Va., and finding that the coach for Cumberland, Md., had already left, demanded in a lordly tone that another one be provided for him forthwith. "Who are YOU?" demanded the stage agent disdainfully. Drawing himself up to his full height of more than six feet, the travel-stained frontiersman replied: "Sir, I am Joe Meek, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from the Republic of Oregon to the Court of the United States." He got the coach!

Envoy or not, there is no question but that Joe Meek was "extraordinary." He was a native of Virginia, who had run away from his home as a youth and who had become a famous trapper and trader in the West.

By 1840 the tide of migration to the Pacific Northwest had set in and Meek, realizing that it spelled the doom of the fur business, decided to go to the Oregon country to make a new start in life.

Then came the meeting of the American settlers at Champoege on May 2, 1843, for the purpose of forming a provisional government and Meek's historic words "Who's for a divide? Those in favor of adopting the report of the committee, follow me." So 52 voted for it and 50 against, and by the narrow margin of two votes and the force of Joe Meek's personality, the first step in saving the Oregon country for the United States was taken.

Joe Meek was elected sheriff, thus giving him the honor of being the first American peace officer west of the Rockies. In the troublous times that followed, when Great Britain threatened to assert her sovereignty over this country and when the hostility of the Indians culminated in the Whitman massacre, the settlers turned again to Joe Meek.

It was he whom they selected to go to Washington and lay before President Polk the plea of the Oregon settlers to be taken into the fold of the United States. So, during the first week in March, 1848, he set out upon his epic journey across the continent which ended the last week in May. The result of his journey was that the federal government decided to accept Oregon as a territory and the appointment of Joseph Lane of Indiana as territorial governor. When Lane started for Oregon to assume office, his guide was Joe Meek now United States marshal for the country which he had helped save for the Stars and Stripes, and from that time to his death in 1875, one of its leading citizens.

Annual Pageant Drama On Tamalpais, May 20

The Mountain Play Association of San Francisco announces the date for the twenty-first annual pageant drama on Mount Tamalpais, which will take place on Sunday, May 20.

An outstanding story of the California days of the gold rush is selected for the vehicle of the current year; David Belasco's stirring story of "The Girl of the Golden West."

No better known epic of the Mother Lode Country is to be found in American literature than this story of Minnie and her outlaw lover, which Belasco is said to have developed at the suggestion of the late Clay M. Greene of San Francisco.

Blanche Bates, now Mrs. George Creel, played in the title role for three consecutive seasons from 1905 to 1908.

Puccini's Opera, "La Fanciulla del West," is founded on the Belasco story. In the role of Johnson, the Road Agent, Enrico Caruso made one of the most notable successes of his career. The Opera was first produced at the Metropolitan, in 1910, with Toscanini directing.

Everett Glass will again direct the play and Glass is now engaged in arranging its adaptation for the out of door stage.

ODDS AND ENDS OF THE WEEK'S NEWS

A. H. Scott, Oakland insurance man, who had been missing since last Friday, returned to his home Tuesday, his clothing in tatters and burns on his arms and body. He declares he was kidnapped by two men, robbed and tortured.

Leslie Hunter and Orloff Kelly, of San Francisco, were fatally injured last Sunday morning when their motorcycle crashed into a parked automobile near the Beach Chalet.

The frantic efforts of friends of five San Quentin convicts to raise funds to defend them from hanging charges in connection with a recent jail-breaking attempt are not meeting with success, it is reported.

Alex Murdock, justice of the peace in Oakley, Contra Costa county, for the past twelve years, died last Saturday at his home following a sudden heart attack. He was 72.

Opening of the Carmel-San Simeon highway, originally programmed for the summer of 1935, may be materially advanced, according to Earl Lee Kelley, state public works director.

With the state's brief in the case as yet not filed, a possibility is seen that arguments in the appeal of David Lamson, convicted of murdering his wife, for a new trial would be put over to the May term of the State Supreme Court.

Howard J. Abbey, 35, San Diego convict, committed suicide at Folsom prison by climbing over the guard rail of the fifth tier of cells and jumping forty feet to the stone floor.

Good Friday services were observed in churches throughout San Mateo county, with stores and many public offices closed. Courts closed during the services, from noon to 3 o'clock.

A definite movement for a San Mateo county auditorium, centrally located and large enough to take care of present and future needs, will be launched next month at a meeting of county and city planners, probably in Burlingame.

War between San Francisco and Peninsula milk dealers was brought to an end last week, following a meeting in San Francisco. Regular prices in effect before the war were restored in San Mateo county.

Miss Ann Hoffman, widely known Peninsula and San Francisco dancing teacher and former resident of Burlingame, died early last Friday in a San Francisco hospital, following a nervous breakdown.

W. J. Eva and Miss Elsie Jansan, of San Mateo, narrowly escaped death in the Sacramento river when a fishing launch struck a submerged log. The two were taken off the sinking launch in a skiff.

Gold ore richer than that uncovered in the rich strike the previous week, was taken from the Morgan claim of the Carson Hill Gold Mining Company at Melones, Calaveras county, last week.

Health insurance as a state and public problem is being studied by a Senate committee of the State Legislature, and a report on the feasibility of the plan will be made at the next session.

Pleading guilty to hit-run charges in connection with the death in an automobile accident several months ago of Robbin Hopper, last week Earl R. Morse, of Burlingame, was granted one year's probation by Municipal Judge Lyle T. Jacks.

Striped Bass Carnival Sunday at McNear's

A striped bass carnival is to be held Sunday, April 15, at McNear's Point, Marin county. It will be under the auspices of the San Francisco Bay Area Sportsmen's Clubs, supported by the chambers of commerce and other civic groups of the bay counties. A program of land and water amusements is being worked out by the various committees, details of which will be announced later.

This carnival, which is going to be an annual affair, climaxes many years of industrial work on the part of California sportsmen and is the result of their appreciation of the legislation passed last year in the interest of striped bass conservation. Striped bass are not native of our western waters, but were transplanted in 1882 from the Atlantic coast at the expense of fishing enthusiasts, and the present supply comes from an original planting of about 300 just above the Carquinez bridge.

Additional interest in the striped bass carnival has been stirred up by the recent phenomenal run of bass in the bay district, the largest in the memory of the oldest fishermen.

SIDELIGHTS

An exchange states that there are 2,000,000 laws, national, state and local, now in effect in the United States. The Israelites under Moses got along fairly well on only ten, none of which are very enthusiastically observed at the present writing.

The Transcript tells of a Boston boy who won a school prize for excellence in natural history. Explaining his victory to his mother, he said: "Teacher asked how many legs an ostrich had, and I said three. All the others said four, so I was nearest right."

The practical joker who periodically sells the Statue of Liberty, the Empire building and other objects of art to unsophisticated customers recently sold the historic Plymouth Rock to a New York dealer in antiques. The buyer sent a truckman to obtain his latest treasure, but when a derrick was being rigged for its removal a limb of the law intervened and stopped the proceedings.

How very much alike twins may be in actions as well as looks was illustrated by Herbert and Albert Jackson of Chicago. Both got married again, without being divorced a few weeks ago; both were arrested for bigamy a few days ago.

Only moderate toll was taken by the law when Mrs. Margaret Johnson, 17, of Richmond, Ind., was fined $15 for crap shooting. She had won $235, so had a net profit of $220 as a result of her investment in the galloping dominoes.

Mrs. William W. Farman of New Haven, Conn., after being a widow a year, married Vincenzo Ardenghi. Her former and present husbands present these contrasts: Farnam was treasurer of Yale and 85 years old at his death. Ardenghi was her Italian chauffeur and was 28 at the time of his marriage, while she was 43.

Asserting that cannibals will not eat a man who used tobacco, a reformer asks if that is not a potent argument against the "filthy weed." It would seem to be a potent argument for the habit if one were inclined to mix in cannibal society.

For completeness and finality it would be hard to beat a report recently made to a commercial agency regarding the credit standing of a certain merchant, concerning which the reporting correspondent wrote: "Credit O. K.; has been out of business some time; also dead."

It is unfortunate to lose a limb, but fortunate that is can not be amputated but once, as James Both, of Bangor, Me., can testify. In crossing a railroad track he misjudged the speed of a passenger train, which threw him for no gain and neatly clipped off the end of his wooden leg.

Getting the wrong telephone number is not unusual, although not so common as jokesmiths would have us believe. But a London telephone girl had occasion to say, "Excuse, please," with unusual humiliation, when she connected a subscriber with Chile instead of Argentina. It is thought to be the first case of giving a patron the wrong country.

Scholarships Awarded By Bank of America

As a means of inspiring the youth of California to envision the nation's future progress, the Bank of America has announced the endowment of two $2,000 scholarships to be awarded for the best essays on the subject "The World of 1964."

The bank's contest is limited to the junior citizens of California, under 18 years of age, in whose hands the control of affairs will rest three decades from now. Paraphrasing the well-remembered proffer of a "penny for your thoughts," the bank is offering the youth of California "A Million Pennies for Your Thoughts."

A total amount of $10,000 will be apportioned to writers of the best essays showing the progress in human life which can ensue during the next thirty years in such fields as science, invention, finance, and government.

A guide to the nation's possibilities of advancement by 1964 is found in the history of the accomplishments of the last thirty years, a period in which automobiles, radio, aircraft and other necessities of modern life have been developed, and in which the Bank of America has grown from a small unit bank to the largest branch banking institution in the United States.

Winners of the two primary awards will be offered scholarships in any university, college or school for which they can qualify scholastically. Numerous cash awards also will be made. The competition is widely endorsed by educational organizations.

Wooden Wheel Care

In order to prevent deterioration, wooden wheels should be treated generously with water at every opportunity and refinished with a good grade of paint at frequent intervals, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

Some of us should be thankful that we are not as foolish as we look.

ANGLERS ARE URGED TO DISPLAY LICENSE

With the opening of the trout season in California, May 1, Major John L. Farley, executive officer of the State Fish and Game Commission, urges possessors of angling licenses to keep conspicuously on display, while fishing, the button that goes with each permit.

By doing this, Major Farley points out, it will be possible to more easily determine those who are fishing without a license. For when a man is seen out in the streams or along the lakes without a button pinned on his coat or shirt, fellow anglers are apt to ask him where his button might be. If he fails to produce one, he will be in a pretty tough spot, and have considerable explaining to do to the anglers as well as the game warden.

This is the first time the button idea has been used in California, and they will be issued with both hunting and angling licenses.

Besides facilitating the work of the game wardens, it is believed the buttons will stimulate the sale of licenses, for those who have heretofore taken a chance of fishing without having the proper permit will hesitate to go forth without the button, and will dig up two dollars rather than chance being arrested.

To save confusion from a last minute rush for licenses, anglers are urged to get their certificates before the last few days prior to the opening of the trout season.

As high as 250,000 angling licenses are sold annually in this state.

Disappearance of Youth Explained by Officers

The mystery surrounding the disappearance of John Boze, Los Angeles youth, said to have been taken from his home Thursday night of last week by Burlingame police officers, was cleared up last Saturday.

The youth was brought back to San Mateo county by state traffic officers on a warrant for reckless driving and speeding, and was taken before Justice of the Peace G. B. Risso in the Broadway court.

According to Captain Paul Perussina, of the state traffic squad, young Boze was cited for several traffic violations November 24, after causing a double collision on the Bayshore highway.

Three citations and two warrants for his arrest were sent out before a San Mateo county officer brought him from Los Angeles.

The postal service always seems more efficient around the first of the month, when no envelope containing a bill ever goes astray.

It takes a lot of courage for a fellow to admit that he is an economist these days.

MINING NOTES

At the conference of Western Governors, held recently in Salt Lake City, Utah, a resolution was unanimously adopted urging the immediate enactment of legislation establishing silver as the primary money metal with the price to be regulated to that of gold. The governors, meeting in special session, declared that silver must be re-established by law as a primary money metal, and that the price must be regulated by law in its relation to gold, and urged that Congress make every effort to enact such legislation, embodying the provisions of the Wheeler amendment, during the present session of Congress.

Estimates at Lake Superior ports, where preparations are progressing rapidly for the opening of navigation are that 40,000,000 tons of ore will move from the Lake Superior mine regions this summer, based on forward orders which reflect almost normal conditions in the construction and other durable industries. Last year's shipments were 21,000,000 tons, and in 1932 they amounted to only 3,500,000 tons.

Options taken more than a year ago to purchase placer gold mining claims on Livengood Creek by the Mines Development Syndicate have been exercised by the syndicate and first payments are now being made to ground owners, says the Alaska Weekly.

The Development Syndicate last spring, summer and early fall, prospecting the optioned area with drills, employing a force of thirty-eight men. The cost of this prospecting work and the initial option payments represent a total outlay of more than $100,000.

Arriving at Dawson after traveling overland from Whitehorse, the two Cowden "cats" with a crew of eight men, pulled into the Yukon metropolis with six heavily loaded sleighs, according to the Dawson News of February 23. The outfit was headed for Walkers' Fork, Alaska, where D. H. Cowden and associates are going to assemble a steam driven dredge this spring.

A gold dredge, as large as an ocean liner, is under construction at Hammon, California, north of San Francisco. The dredge is of steel construction, 550 feet long and 68 feet beam, drawing 30 feet of water. The dredge will be able to reach 150 feet beneath the surface of the ground, or 110 feet below water in which it floats. The largest previous dredge went 105 feet into the earth. Each of the 130 buckets will lift 18 cubic feet of earth. The buckets will weigh two and one-half tons each. The dredge will be electrically operated, and a crew of five men will be employed to shift the machine, which is expected to handle 15,000 cubic yards each twenty-four hours.

Repair work on dredges to make them ready for this year's operations is under way by the Fairbanks Exploration Company. Twenty-five men were sent to Lower Goldstream and to Chotanika to take up immediately the repairing of dredges.

The Dalhousie property in the Upper Bear River area will be reopened in the event that silver prices are increased in Canada, according to reports from Vancouver.

Pay of all employees of the Fairbanks Exploration Company was increased approximately 10 per cent, effective the first of February. This increase, J. E. Hopkins, assistant superintendent in charge of present activities, explained, restores salaries and wages to the levels they were prior to the decrease that was announced last spring, and became effective May 1.

A loose piston, or so-called "piston slap," is always more noticeable when the engine is operating under a heavy load, such as climbing a grade, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

Applause in church is inappropriate, but many express their approval of the sermon by nodding.

Reflects Improvement in Pacific Coast Business

Reflecting the upturn in Pacific Coast business and the attending increase in demand for credit, Bank of America's loans and discounts were expanded by $5,347,629 during January, February and the first five days of March. The increase is particularly significant as it represents a turning point for bank loans on the Pacific Coast, which have been contracting during recent years.

Substantial increases in total deposits, total resources, investments in government bonds and in undivided profits are other highlights shown by the March 5 statement of Bank of America N. T. & S. A. and Bank of America (California).

Deposits of the banks on March 5 totaled $867,214,760, a gain of $41,162,892 since the first of the year. Resources, totaling $1,041,288,175, increased $35,611,887 during the same period.

Undivided profits of Bank of America increased $1,466,602 between January 1 and March 5, indicating that profits during a period of only slightly more than two months covered forty-six per cent of dividend requirements on capital stock for the entire year.

The bank increased its holdings of securities materially during the January-March 5 period, adding $24,652,794 to its investment in government bonds and increasing total security investments by $28,182,683. Cash increased $4,702,465, bringing the total to $111,190,612 as of March 5.

Worn Cylinders

New piston rings will not improve compression to any great extent or stop oil pumping if the cylinder is worn out of round, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Installing rings will help somewhat if cylinders are not badly worn, but usually the best remedy is to have the cylinders trued up and then properly fitted with pistons and rings.

Carbon Makes Heat

Excess carbon in the combustion chamber will cause the engine to overheat, particularly in warm weather or on long drives where grades are encountered, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.
